

Abstract

A one piece flat plastic embodiment that keeps both sections of a three-point seat belt together when buckled up. This embodiment causes the upper torso section of a three-point seat belt to change its angle and how it lays across the users shoulder when buckled up. The further away from the seat belt locking device it is placed will cause the torso section of the seat belt to be further away from the user's neck.